.xml myfile.bin (I'm not sure what the tab is for) On the command line, I get an error about not being able to find the myfile.bin. How to I specify the file as a command-line argument? (I am using Mac OS X Snow Leopard) A: You need to use -- to start the switch from within a shell script: if [ $# -eq 1 ]; then file=$1 else file=$(echo $@ | tr ' ' '\t') fi mf dll halo 2 $file file.xml And remember that when your shell is running that script you need to have something like set -x at the start. Battlefield 4 battlelog Joel McDowell, writing for Electronic Gaming Monthly, has an article discussing the challenges the development team faced in getting Battlefield 4 out the door. To quote, "The Battlefield series has long prided itself on its sheer scale and over the top environment, and that's definitely the core of what is in this year's sequel, Battlefield 4." However, EA DICE apparently had a lot of pressure to make sure that the game delivered on the promises set by the original release. He says that the studio did great and made up for it with some heavy post-release support. "Like the original, Battlefield 4 is a huge game and, with over a million and a half servers worldwide, there's no way we could have possibly included everything, but the quality is still there." The article goes on to cover some of the changes made to the online experience from Battlefield 3, such as the co-op campaign.
